ValuePenguin.com: Tulane Accounting - Neil Huntsman

November 6, 2014

ValuePenguin.com, a website that provides personal finance research and analysis, interviewed Master of Accounting student Neil Huntsman (MACCT '15) for its "Future of Accountants" series.

> "The environment at Tulane is perfect for professional education. I can already tell there has been a change in the way I think and process information. My classes are not basic accounting courses where a student learns to book specific entries. My classes stress analytical thinking and problem solving. The class size facilitates discussion with my peers and professors. It was strange to transition to a school where not only do all my professors know my name, but they want to know more about me. That level of personal engagement with professors is what I love most about Tulane."

To read the interview in its entirety, visit ValuePenguin.com.

http://www.valuepenguin.com/2014/11/tulane-university-accounting-neil-huntsman