With more than 700 degree candidates set to participate in this year’s graduation festivities, the Freeman School did something it had never done before: Host three ceremonies.

On Friday, May 17, The Freeman School hosted two separate diploma ceremonies for undergraduate degree candidates and one for master's and PhD candidates.

“This was the ‘COVID class,’ the students whose high school graduations were cancelled due to the pandemic, so there was pent-up demand among students and their families to experience a graduation ceremony with all the pomp and circumstance,” said Goes. “By splitting the undergraduate ceremony into two — one for finance majors and one for all other majors — we were able to do away with tickets and open the ceremonies to whomever wished to attend.”

That decision was greeted enthusiastically, with thousands of family members and friends filling Avron B. Fogelman Arena at Devlin Fieldhouse for the Freeman School’s three graduation ceremonies.

The festivities kicked off at 8 a.m. with the undergraduate ceremony for finance majors followed by a reception in the Goldring/Woldenberg Business Complex’s Marshall Family Commons. As soon as that ended, the second undergraduate ceremony — for management, marketing and legal studies in business majors — began at 11 a.m. with a reception following.

In addressing the class, Dean Goes reflected on the tumultuous time in which students are graduating, a period marked by war, economic uncertainty, climate change and technological disruption, before declaring that they, by virtue of their Freeman education, are well prepared to take on the challenges of the day.

“The Freeman experience— that one-of-a-kind combination of academics, experiential learning, professional development and extracurricular activities— provides you with the applicable skills you need to hit the ground running in your professional careers,” Goes said. “At the same time, your Freeman education also emphasizes those uniquely human capabilities — critical thinking, communication, decision making, ethics, leadership — skills that enable you to think on your feet, adapt to new and unforeseen challenges, and manage transformative change within your organizations. Together with your unique life experiences, you have everything you need to take on this dynamic, fast-changing world.”
