

Tulane Business Forum spotlights industries powering Louisiana economic growth

September 8, 2024

As Louisiana eyes its future, a handful of industries are expected to drive economic growth, including energy, hospitality, international trade and banking. Helping to fuel those industries is artificial intelligence, which is expected to play an increasingly significant role in almost every business.

For the 45th annual Tulane Business Forum, a distinguished lineup of local, regional and national business experts will discuss the current state of these critical industries and what Louisiana business leaders can expect to see over the next 10 years.

"Powering the Wave: Innovation, Trade and Economic Resilience" will take place on Friday, Sept. 27, at the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center in New Orleans. More than 600 business people from across the region are expected to attend this year's forum to hear key insights on the local and national economies.

Dan Brouillette

“Louisiana’s economy continues to be led by traditional industries such as energy, international trade and hospitality, but each of those industries is moving in new directions and all are expected to be supercharged by artificial intelligence,” said Chris Williams (MBA ’11), president of the Tulane Association of Business Alumni (TABA), which organizes the annual conference. “The 45th Tulane Business Forum will highlight these important industries as well as some of the changes we can expect to see on the horizon.”

Serving as this year's luncheon keynote speaker will be Dan Brouillette, former U.S. Secretary of Energy and current president and CEO of the Edison Electric Institute, which represents all U.S. investor-owned electric companies. EEI’s members provide electricity for nearly 250 million Americans and operate in all 50 states and Washington D.C. as well as in Europe, Asia and Latin America. Brouillette, who also previously served as president of Sempra Infrastructure (SI) and as deputy secretary of the U.S. Department of Energy, will discuss how domestic and international electric companies are gearing up to deliver the future of energy.

In addition to Brouillette, this year's program will also include:
