

The Hustle: Why turkey gets cheaper around Thanksgiving

November 18, 2024

Chris Hydock, assistant professor of marketing, was interviewed by the Hustle for a story about why retailers reduce the price of turkey around peak demand times like Thanksgiving when traditional economics would suggest that they charge more.

“The idea is these customers will stop in a Target, buy a turkey, and then also get a new couch or new TV or something,” says Chris Hydock, a Tulane University professor who studies retail pricing. “Or, in general, next time they go shopping they think, ‘Hey last time I shopped at Target it was cheap. And I should go back to Target in the future.’”

To read the story in its entirety, visit thehustle.co:

<https://thehustle.co/originals/why-turkey-gets-cheaper-around-thanksgiving?>

Interested in advancing your education and/or career? Learn more about Freeman's wide range of graduate and undergraduate programs. Find the right program for you.